TALK TOPICS

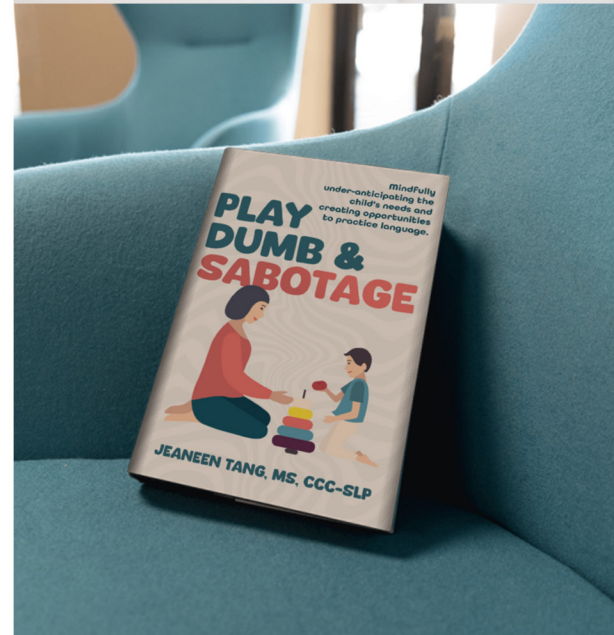

With proper training, the number of children who require speech therapy for early intervention and early school age can be decreased significantly.

We are required to have birthing training when we have a child, but we're not required or offered parent training on how to develop language and communication in our children. It's time we change that.

The approach to teaching language and communication to children needs to be revamped. With some simple strategies, we can help close the gap for those children who are "late talkers," and help them be successful communicators.

IN THIS BOOK YOU WILL LEARN

After reading this book, you will be able to identify areas where you over-anticipate a child's needs, how we are doing children a disservice by doing so, how to mindfully under-anticipate a child's needs, how to create opportunities to practice language in functional ways, and strategies to apply to everyday activities to help develop effective communicators.
